Joan Bradley with her tool board for 'bringing back the bush' (Audrey Lenning)

This talk will show how through the Mosman Parks and Bushland Association the sisters Eileen and Joan Bradley developed their methods for regenerating bush. They did so by removing weeds where the native flora was strongest. Their insights successfully challenged conventional bush regeneration practice, becoming the basis of what is now the multi-million dollar business of bushland management.

Anne Cook gained a Graduate Diploma in Public History from Murdoch University with a High Distinction for her original research on the origins and development of bush regeneration.
